

Philosophical Ponderings of a Farmer

House Plants vs Garden Plants (c) 2018

I have to admit that I'm a horrible house plant owner. At worst, I forget about them completely; at best, I remember to water them about once a week. And they keep surviving! I mean, they have been in these tiny pots that dry out regularly without any soil amendments and they just keep growing.
Way to go house plants!

I find my lack of enthusiasm about them a bit ironic as I'm obsessive about caring for my farm veggies. And I can't even see them from my house. I actually rode my bike to one of my plots before I even had my tea this morning, just to turn on the water. But yet, I pass by my house plants many times a day and they don't usually enter into my consciousness.

Hmmmm... I just realized that I haven't watered them for at least 2 weeks so I'm going to sign off and give them at least a little bit of love. :)
