

Philosophical Ponderings of a Farmer

Winter Mode (c) 2019

While things are definitely slowing down for the year, particularly since last week's freeze, I've also noticed that each task is taking me longer to complete. Like my productivity is directly tied to how much time I have and how important it is that things happen immediately. In the height of the summer when there is so much going on that I barely have time to breathe, all the things that simply must happen seem to get done. I don't know how, but they do. However, now that I have more time, I find that I am still cleaning up the squash plants from the field, even though I've supposedly been working on it for a few weeks now. Or that even though two weeks ago I was able to process 4 recipes and 7 or 8 batches of canned goods in a day, last week I did just over half that in the same amount of time. As the saying goes, if you need something done, ask a busy person.
